BASSANO TEAMS STILL WINNING

Bassano played host to Rolling Hills in a Senior Baseball fixture on Sunday and took them to camp with a 11-4 shellacking.

Allan Munro was pitcher and Bill Raleigh was catcher for the locals.

Bassano will play at Scandia next Sunday.

The Bassano Pony League Baseball Club recently defeated the visiting team from Hussar by a convincing score of 11-4.

Star pitcher for the winning club was Ronnie Helwig, who did some brilliant pitching. The Bassano club has shown good form this year and promises to be a strong contender for the top honors.

The club is again under the direction of W. A. Lee, local RCMP constable, who has trained the boys to play heads-up ball.

Rockyford is scheduled to play at Bassano next Sunday afternoon. Baseball fans should make arrangements to see this game at the local diamond as the next few games in this league will be played away from home.

LOCAL CHURCHMEN ATTEND CONFERENCE

The 27th annual conference of the Prairie District of the Evangelical Free Church was held at Champion recently with pastors and delegates representing the Prairie Provinces being present.

The reports from various churches showed marked progress over the past year. The treasurer, Rev. K. Loge, also presented a favorable picture on finances.

Local churchmen elected to serve on the Executive Board for the coming year are Rev. L. A. Tiede, Bassano, as secretary and Rev. K. Loge of Brooks as treasurer.

MAKEPEACE NEWS

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Bulger arrived home safe and sound but tired from their three weeks holiday in B.C. They report a wonderful time.

Mr. Bulger said that considerable damage by frost had been suffered by fruit trees in the Valley.

Mrs. Jim Kirwan and boys are spending a week at home before moving to Wetaskiwin, where Jim hopes to get on as second man in the Pool elevator.

A large crowd gathered at the home of Mrs. Olivia Jorgensen on Saturday night to help celebrate her birthday.

The high winds did considerable damage on the G.W. Dyck farm on Sunday. It demolished two granaries and carried a wagon box several yards and dumped it in the slough. Let's hope this is the only wind of the season.

Rain would be appreciated but the farmers report no crop damage as yet.

Kai Larsen Jr. has been very successful on his fishing trips lately - one fish at a time. Better than none at all, Kai says.

Glad to be able to report that Jerry Ewing and family have decided to stay on in Makepeace buying grain for the time being.

OUR COMPLETE SHORT STORY —

CHRYSLALISH

—By LOUIS ARTHUR CUNNINGHAM

MIDGE spied the afternoon-tea crowd clustered around tables on the terrace; her elder sisters, Helen and Frances, surrounded by a lot of what Midge Ayling termed "outlanders", girls in gay summer silks and organdies, red, blue, purple, orange, looking like a crazy quilt with a green matrix of lawn and trees; men in white flannels and blazers. Midge wore a disreputable pair of khaki shorts and a turtle-necked sweater and her cropped curls hadn't quite dried from her recent swimming excursion with Tara. There was a hundred pounds of Tara—Irish wolfhound, amiable but uncouth.

"Listen, Donkey," murmured Midge with an affectionate tug at the leash, "we won't go up the drive in full view of the nobility. Helen and Frances would be mortified. We'll go around the back."

Tara thought otherwise. His saucer-like eyes under their matted hair-curtains glowered balefully at Mortimer, Helen's tortoiseshell cat. Tara rumbled like thunder and started off after Mortimer, who was bound for tea and tidbits. "Hi-yah!" squealed Midge, jerked off balance. "Back, you—" She tried to untangle her wrist from the twisted leash. Trees, shrubbery, flower-beds, whirled by in a blur—then she was in among the tea.

She heard screams, shouts, the clatter of crockery, felt a muffin hit her in the ear and something wet slosh down her leg. Her hand rested in the middle of someone's French pastry and she came to a halt in the lap of a grinning youth who had a stranglehold with one hand on Tara's neck and with the other on Midge's shoulder, his arm encircling her.

"You're late," he said, "but you shouldn't have rushed so; you've fallen off your horse."

Midge wriggled away from his arm and stood up. She didn't know him at all, and the rest of the crowd only casually. She felt the eyes of Helen and Frances before she looked into them to find bitter reproach and accusation. Helen's were blue and blazing, Frances' were gray and glowering. Midge groped for Tara's leash.

"Aren't you—" Helen and Frances spoke at once.

"Wordsworth," said Midge lightly.

"Dickens," murmured the strange young man who had wavy black hair and a thin brown face. Midge giggled.

"I'm sorry," she said with a contrite tilt of her eyes at the upset party. "But it was that wretched Mortimer's fault. Tara and I were going home by way of the hedge and the tradesman's entrance—"

The dark young man guffawed and instantly smothered it.

"Sense of humor," murmured Midge.

"I think you had better resume your journey," said Frances icily. "It seems—"

"May I be presented to the young lady?" said the dark young man. "Your sister, isn't she?"

"Afraid so. Millicent, let me present Mr. Gerald Wycoff."

Midge nodded and wiped a chocolate éclair from her finger.

"Can't you stay—?" began Gerald Wycoff. "I—"

Midge shook her head. "I have to put Tara in his stall, then I have a few chores to do. I trust," she finished brightly, "you'll forgive me for tearing myself away."

She walked away from the minor chaos, Tara shambling beside her, a slender, straight, long-legged girl in that limbo period when one stands on the lintel of womanhood with childish things put by and no step taken into the beckoning land. But Midge remembered those dark bright eyes and the wide smile and the strong yet gentle clasp of his arm. Midge sighed and absently scratched Tara's floppy ear.

She left him in his kennel and went upstairs to sluice sand off herself under an icy shower. Dressing was the usual lightning process of donning tweed skirt and sweater, ankle-socks and brogues and making motions at the curls with a bristly brush. This done, she looked in the mirror. Usually only for a moment, this scrutiny of herself, but today—

Over the fresh young beauty of her face there passed a shadow—or was it a brighter light—and the capeless sweater came off and the skirt and the socks and the tongued brogues. As the butterfly, dropping off its cocoon, emerges iridescent into the sun—

"Look at Midge!"

She heard Frances' stage-whisper to Helen just as she entered the dining-room. She hadn't delayed purposely. Usually, she was the first there. But tonight she didn't feel hungry. She felt serene and gentle towards everyone—even Frances, who always plagued her. She wore a frilled frock of delicate shell-pink, and silk stockings and slippers and her hair shone in the sunset; no powder or rouge could entrance the flawless brown and rose of Midge's cheeks.

"Midge—" It was Tony, the only brother and the eldest of the four—"you are very beautiful."

Midge once would have thrown a roll at him; now she looked down at her plate and said, "Thanks, Tony."

For the dark young man was there and had risen to put her in her chair and had stared at her as one who has witnessed a miracle. There was another man, Lindsay Clark, a friend of Tony's, and that was all. Mr. Ayling was dining at his club; their mother had long since gone, when Midge

These rules may prevent drowning

Six rules which, if observed, may help to prevent drownings are:

1. Wait for at least two hours after meals before going in the water. Don't swim if you are particularly tired or overheated.

2. In diving, look before you leap. The bottom can appear farther away than it actually is.

3. Follow beach or pool regulations and obey lifeguards. Never swim alone. Children should be watched constantly.

4. Ocean swimming can be particularly treacherous. Waves and undertows are unpredictable and shouts for help are unlikely to be heard.

5. Leave marathon swims to the experts. Remember, it is at least as far back to the beach as it is away from it.

6. If your boat overturns, stick with it if you are far from shore. You can remain as long as the boat does.

was very young.

Gerald Wycoff at Midge's right, with Helen above him, didn't resume the gay conversation that Midge's entry had stilled. They were all quieter. It seemed strange to all of them—to the Aytings, anyway. Midge was usually the centre of a barrage of wise-cracks, but you couldn't seem to talk that way to this new, strangely quiet Midge.

Afterwards Gerald Wycoff said softly, "Are you really the girl who came to the tea-party with the wolfhound and—and fell in my lap and—?"

Midge looked at him gravely, then her lips curved in a very little smile.

"No," she said, "I'm afraid I'm not."

Strong, majestic river in Atlantic -- the Gulf Stream

There is a river in the Atlantic Ocean. Unlike the rivers of the land its banks and its invisible mile-deep bottom are of cold water but the river itself is warm—80 degrees Fahrenheit for its first 400 miles. In all the earth there is no other flow of water so majestic. None is so long or so strong as this, the Gulf Stream, states an article by E. Griffiths in Nautical Magazine, Glasgow, Scotland.

Picture a warm water river, 40 and more miles wide, with its source in the Gulf of Mexico and its mouth in the Arctic. Think of it pouring into the ocean the discharge of 10,000 river Thames.

Think of it flowing—more rapidly than the majestic Amazon—over 6,000 miles of cold ocean and bringing warmth and life to lands in the Arctic Circle that otherwise would have been as bleak as Greenland.

A steam heating plant of similar proportions would stagger the imagination. Yet this one is a working reality.

Inconceivable heat

Far up in Northern Norway—well within the Arctic Circle—the port of Hammerfest feels it. All winter long the harbor remains open. Fishermen come and go. But Riga, 800 miles south, is icebound the whole winter.

The amount of heat stored in the Gulf Stream is inconceivable. Britain has, it is estimated, enough coal for some 2,500 years. Pile it all together for one massive conflagration. Throw in the entire reserves of oil and natural gas in America. Together they would not produce the amount of heat energy carried by the Gulf Stream in a single year.

In the true sense the Gulf Stream is not a river at all. Instead of widening its channel from head to mouth, as rivers do, the Stream narrows seaward. Instead of deepening as it goes on it grows shallower.

WEEKLY BIBLE COMMENT

JOHN IS THE APOSTLE OF LOVE

John is the great apostle of Christian love. It forms the theme of his epistles.

In John's conception, not to love is to be virtually dead, but to love is to abide in God and to have God abiding in one's soul. Hatred is akin to murder, whereas love is so strong and great it would incline one even to give his life for others.

John says that we have knowledge of love because Christ laid down His life for us. John makes a test of love, and in this he compares it with the practical Christian philosophy of the Epistle of James.

He asks whether the love of God can abide in any man who has plenty of this world's goods but who withholds his compassion and his aid from his needy brethren. He makes a very definite admonition, addressing the Christian disciples as his "little children". John says, "Let us not love in word, neither with the tongue; but in deed and truth."

As if this were not enough, he proceeds to deal with the foundation of this love and its divine sources and meaning. "Beloved", he says, "let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is begotten of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love."

What a rich and wonderful definition in those three words, "God is love!"

Malnutrition

Although they spend an all-time high of $65 billion on food in 1955, Americans are malnourished, according to an editorial in the current Medical Times. "The most glaring deficiency is the lack of vitamins, minerals and roughage in natural forms," it is pointed out. Poorly balanced meals—rather than not enough food—has brought about this condition.

CUSTOM STILL OBSERVED

PICKY-CHOOSEY ONES

If the family is difficult to please in food, with particular likes and dislikes, it often helps if the food is glamorized somewhat. The less popular dishes can be made more attractive, such as tinting milk with a little cooking color and adding some favored flavoring such as chocolate. A small salad as a daily side dish can be a valuable addition to the meal, and salads lend themselves to attractive arrangements.

World Happenings In Pictures

ONE WAY TO DO IT—If your tastes in personal air conditioning run to expensive extremes, follow the formula devised by this Copenhagen, Denmark, Miss for hot-weather comfort. A milk bath is refreshing, inside and out, and you waste no time slaving over a hot stove while fixing dinner.

TIGHT SQUEEZE—Toothpaste tube cap-like hat tops this sheath-type beige shantung suit now showing in Paris. The French creation features a trailing shawl collar and square neckline. Black gloves and shoes complete the ensemble.

WORST SUSPICIONS CONFIRMED—Harried citizens convinced of the omnipotence of the tax collector will be horrified to know that the girl peering from the mail collection rack, above, is an Internal Revenue Service employee. Margie Spencer, who works for the Internal Revenue department in Indianapolis, Ind., is appearing in a strictly unofficial capacity. She's posing to emphasize attractiveness of Uncle Sam's new mail collection racks and is not scrounging the mails for late tax returns. Citizens perform first steps in mail sorting operations by depositing air and special delivery matter at left; out-of-town first-class mail goes at right and local letters drop on top of Margie's head.

C-O-O-L—It's as clear as the crystal-c-o-o-l water, above, that this is no weather in which to work. We all can't go canoeing on Lac Beauvert, near Jasper, Alberta, in the Canadian Rockies but we can think about it as a mental antidote for the hot weather we're experiencing.

POINT OF VIEW—Carla Bushness, three, doesn't enjoy being on top of the world. She's resting on Arctic section of huge globe aboard the Independence, docked at New York City. The Salt Lake City youngster and her mother returned to this country aboard the liner after visiting daddy, Captain Clark C. Bushness, stationed in Italy.

SAILORS GO "DOWNSTAIRS"—They do, if they're assigned to the Nautilus, Uncle Sam's first submarine powered by atomic fuel. Old salts shudder at the substitution of "downstairs" for "below", but the term is appropriate when applied to the nine-step stairway leading from conning tower to diving control compartment.

DIAMOND DESPERADO—Masked menace is Vic Wertz, Cleveland Indians' first sacker, who's gunning for the Yankees' pennant hopes on behalf of the tribe. Photographer Ronald Kuntz captured the horseplay in Indians' dugout at Cleveland's stadium as Yanks and Indians waited in vain for a game-stopping rain to let up.

CAPS ARE SET—Fashion sets her cap for summer with an "Ivy League" sports model in striped madras, top, and a French-inspired sailor beret, bottom, of white pique set off with a red pompom.

FIREBALL—Photo of the fireball from hydrogen bomb test was made approximately 50 miles northwest of the target over Bikini atoll. The Atomic Energy Commission said it shows the hydrogen fireball forming. Atomic officials said that the bomb lived up to its advance billing as a radio-actively "sanitary" weapon.
